ARTIFICIAL

Although many people often confuse granite with quartzite on the contrary, quartzite, like marble, is a metamorphic rock, rather than igneous rock like granite.

Extremely hard and compact, of a finer grain than granite exotically veined and colored like marble, quartzite is the most versatile stone amongst all of the natural stones.

Stronger than marble and even granite, quartzite is actually the most durable natural stone.

In fact, quartzite can be called nearly indestructible resistant to chemical weathering, non porous scratch resistant, and hard as diamonds, quartzite is easy to maintain and keep bacteria-free.

TERRAZZO

The word terrazzo comes from “terra,” which is Latin for ground. This antiquity-inspired material gives an artisanal feel to home interiors. Terrazzo is a composite material made with marble granite, glass, or quartz chips set into cement.

Its roots start in Egyptian mosaics, but it became popular in 16th century Italy to make use of stone offcuts.

It is either poured by hand or precast into blocks that get cut to size.

Restaurants and hotels often use this durable material in heavy traffic areas, like bars and lobbies but it also can be perfectly placed in a residential home.
