TRAVERTINE

Travertine is a form of massive calcium carbonate, a natural stone resulting from the sedimentation of rivers and springs.

Though it is porous, it is in fact it is a dense and closely compacted form of limestone.

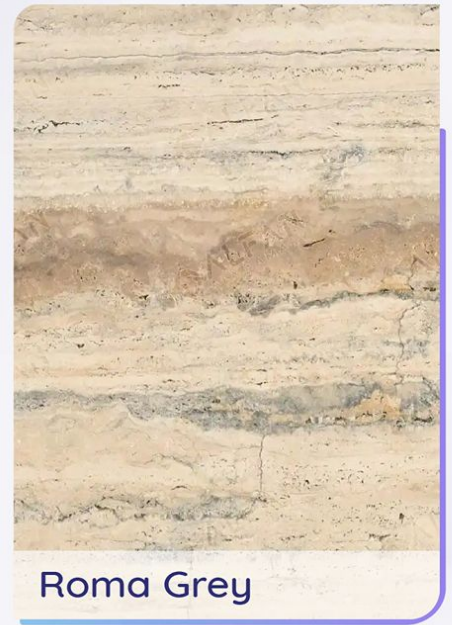

It is the perfect material for residential and commercial use, due its to subtle splendor and durability.

The iconic Coliseum of Rome is the ideal example to showcase the architectural potential of travertine.

LIME STONE

Limestone has a rich history of being central to architectural expression around the world.

This sedimentary rock is very commonly used in construction, especially in Europe and North America.

Its longevity, and ability to withstand exposure to the even the most adverse weather conditions, make it a dependable architectural resource.

Limestone has been used in some of the world's foremost monuments, such as the Great Pyramids of Egypt.
